

THE NEW FACES OF AN ITALY THAT STUDIES AND WORKS

Two pictures by Oliviero Toscani for United Colors of Benetton tell a story of integration

The new faces of an Italy that studies and works, in Oliviero Toscani's pictures for United Colors of Benetton.

The first image depicts a group of medical school students - among them a Nigerian, an Indian, a Chadian, an Anglo-Sri Lankan and an Italo-Nigerian - who will one day make important contributions to Italy's national health system.

The second photo shows a group of professionals. There is a police officer from Enna, a town councillor in the Scandicci Education Department, a priest from the province of Pavia, an imam from Rome, a doctor and a lawyer from Milan. They are originally from Cameroon, Senegal, Indonesia, Togo and the Democratic Republic of Congo, respectively. They are all working to build a better Italy.

These pictures are part of a wider project on integration that United Colors of Benetton launched last fall with two photos of pupils at a multi-ethnic school in Milan.
